

Well, the end of summer is nearing but this year I have started fall (second season) plantings. (radish, beet, peas and a few greens). Knowing that the past few years stayed pretty warm right into November, I'm hopeful these will thrive even into the colder weather when I convert the garden box into a coldframe. This worked well last year. Everything in the cold frame survived and thrived later. Here are some shots of what's growing in the garden right now.
