

May 21 in the garden.

Except for the groundhog eating of the tops of the sunflower it's a beautiful day. The squirrels here are doing their usual decorating and disruption. Some neighbors leave them bread. The squirrels then dig up my seedlings to "hide" it in the soil for later. Pictured below is a solution I have come up with (at least for the fence boxes). They are plastic grids that backed filters for the furnace and are secured by string... well necessity is the mother of invention... It works for now.

Plants with me are "lifers". This clematis is a joy to behold every spring and is 20 years old!
